Battle of the rib fests

This summer will see some friendly competition

Haley Ritchie Metro | Ottawa

Ottawa is in for an extra-sticky, extra-saucy summer, now that the city will be hosting multiple rib fest events.

Ottawa's downtown rib festival returns to Sparks Street this year from June 17 to 21, but the BIA event will be facing competition from the new Capital Ribfest running July 30 to August 3.

"The city is definitely big enough to support two rib festivals," said Capital Ribfest organizer Les Gagne, the former director of the Sparks Street BIA who has been launching events like Poutine-Fest and Ribfest solo since parting ways with the organization.

"It's going to offer a different option for people who might not want to go to Sparks Street. It's a very kidfriendly, different place," he said.

Gagne's event will take place in the Festival Plaza beside city hall. Like his Poutinefest, the trucks will be organized in a "circle" instead of a row down the street.

Capital Ribfest will also have a beer garden. Gagne said he's even considering bringing a third suburban rib fest in Kanata this summer.

Sparks Street BIA coordinator Kevin McHale said the original Ottawa Ribfest on is a legacy operation.

"It's been on the street for 23 years. It's grown from an event three rib trucks to last year we have 17 trucks on the street,"

he said. The Sparks Street Ribfest doesn't serve beer alongside food, but most restaurants on allow festival goers to bring their ribs onto a patio if they order

Both Gagne and McHale emphasized that unlike the chefs that will competing for the best barbecue, the competition between the rivalling rib festivals isn't all that fiery.

"I'm just worried about making our event as good as it can be," said McHale. "Our job is to put on the best possible event that we can do.'

Ottawa student wins Biogenius competition

Ottawa teen Aditya Mohan is now officially a biology

Mohan's project — a designer virus capable of killing cancer cells - won the final round of the Sanofi Biogenius Canada competition on Tuesday afternoon.

His project is based on a modified version of the common cold virus, which operates like a "Trojan horse" and attacks and kills cancer cells.

Mohan said he believes his virus is thousands of times more effective than what is in the market, and has already been getting attention from biomedical companies. Pembroke man charged in Ottawa gas station robbery

Police have charged a Pembroke man in relation to a gas station robbery on Prince of Wales Drive near Fisher Avenue in February.

Police said a man entered the gas station just after 1:30 a.m. on Feb. 19, indicated he had a weapon and made off with an undisclosed amount of cash. He fled on foot, but police recovered evidence nearby, including a pocket knife.

Nicholas Lester, 30, surrendered to police on Tuesday and was charged with robbery with an offensive weapon, among other charges. MICHAEL WOODS/METRO

New treatment gives hope to MS patient

Lucy Scholey Metro | Ottawa

In June of 2000, Kelly Lauzon passed her eye exam with perfect vision.

Months later, she woke up nearly blind.

"All I could see were shadows," she said.

She was referred to an ophthalmologist, who sent her to Dr. Mark Freedman at the University of Ottawa. He diagnosed her with relapsing remitting multiple sclerosis.

She was just 22 years old and in her last year of university.

"I just thought ... my world is now over," she said. "Life as I know it is done forever."

She started treatments, but would relapse every four to six weeks — losing sight in one eye and then the other. On a different course of treatment, her relapses were less frequent although still inconsistent.

Kelly Lauzon

Dr. Freedman then put her on Lemtrada — a 20-year-old drug new to Canada. It kills white blood cells to stop them from entering the brain. Lauzon now takes the medication through an IV.

May 27 marks World MS Day and Canada has one of the highest rates in the world.

Dr. Freedman says treatments like Lemtrada should give hope to MS patients, but there's still a "tremendous" amount of work left.

"If you wait until a stage where you end up with progression of disease, then the drugs we are using today become rather ineffective," he said. "Almost the entire research program right now is focused on trying to help progressive disease.'

Lauzon now travels once a year with her fiancée and the two will be venturing to Miami later this year to get married.

Tow truck drivers fined for chasing

Six Ottawa tow truck drivers who allegedly rushed to the scene of an accident on Tuesday morning drove away with fines, say Ottawa police.

One police officer is saying collision chasing has reached "epidemic proportions in Ottawa."

"Not only are tow truck drivers breaking the law by approaching collision scenes, they can also cause further danger at what is already a hazardous situation."

A patrol officer responded to the Tuesday collision at Kirkwood and Coldrey avenues and found seven tow trucks "congesting the scene attempting to solicit business," according to an Ottawa police news release. At least one of the motorists was injured.

It's illegal for tow truck drivers to offer services within 100 metres of the scene of a collision.

Six drivers now each face a $175 fine. The seventh driver left with a warning.

"It has been our experience that some Ottawa tow truck drivers have fraudulently claimed that the police have sent them to the scene and they have often convinced unsuspecting motorists that their otherwise drivable cars must be towed."

In March, Metro first reported that Ottawa police have been staging phony collisions on local streets in order to ticket tow truck drivers who respond to the scene.

Rezoning could help fill area vacancies: Jeff Leiper

With its vacant lots, parking spaces and few commercial storefronts, Armstrong Street is hardly scenic for cyclists.

Just north of bustling Wellington Street West, the cycling route provides a safer trip into Hintonburg, but no one rides that way because there's "no destination" on Armstrong Street, according to area Coun. Jeff Leiper.

Leiper and a group of business owners are looking to change that.

At a planning committee on Tuesday, the Kitchissippi councillor introduced a motion asking for a study of lots along the street for new "micro-retail" zoning within existing homes.

The zoning could allow for smaller yoga studios or cafes, for example, to pop up in the neighbourhood.

Leiper envisions a "funky new development" along the vacant street or an "incubation space" for new businesses.

The Hintonburg Community Association, the Wellington West BIA and Leiper's office are footing the bill for the study, which is expected to take about a year.

Leiper's motion is in addition to a larger zoning amendment for mom and pop shops, which was also approved by the planning committee. It would permit existing neighbourhood businesses to continue operating under the law and allow people to open small businesses in their homes.

Under current zoning bylaws, small businesses grandfathered into residential areas are limited in use. If a decades-old deli closes — or the owner dies — that building usually flips to residential use to fit with the neighbourhood.

But a rezoning application can cost a small business owner $15,000 to $20,000, plus the costs of flipping the commercial space back to residential use. Instead of a new business, a neighbourhood might watch that building turn into an abandoned eyesore.

The zoning amendment will go to council for final approval.

Baird named advisor

John Baird has lined up another plum gig. Leading law firm Bennett Jones said Tuesday it has hired the former foreign affairs minister as a senior advisor.

In a release, Baird said he will provide "strategic counsel" to Bennett Jones and their clients.

Since the longtime member of Parliament for Ottawa West-Nepean abruptly left cabinet in February and resigned his seat the following month, he has been racking up positions in the private sector.

Mining giant Barrick Gold appointed him to its international advisory board. Canadian Pacific Railway named him to its board of directors.

He is also advising Hong Kong billionaire Richard Li, the son of one of the wealthiest men in Asia, on international matters.

In the release Tuesday, Baird said he's particularly excited to continue his interest in Canada-China relations, and the Bennett Jones office in Beijing was a further draw to the firm.

Carleton, Equal Voice release guide for women in politics

Haley Ritchie Metro|Ottawa

Researchers at Carleton University and the non-profit organization Equal Voice have released a crash course guide for women thinking of entering the life of politics.

"We look for the day when it won't matter whether you're male or female; it's just, 'are you going to be a good leader?' But we're not there," said Clare Beckton, executive director of Carleton's Centre for Women in Politics and Public Leadership.

The guide has separate chapters on starting out, financing campaigns, branding, media training and how to prepare for the challenges facing some female candidates.

Many chapters contain examples and tips from successful women politicians.

Women currently hold 25 per cent of seats at the federal and municipal levels, according to a release from the university.

It added that representation varies between 16 and 37 per cent at the provincial level.

guidebook will improve those numbers.

"People who want to run for office can now look in one place, and know that the guide is backed by research," she said.

Both Equal Voice and Carleton University offer development courses to prepare women for running in politics, but Beckton said the free online guide gives access to everyone.

"If you can't afford to go to a campaign school or you don't have time, there is a lot of good advice in the guide," she said.

Beckton said although many women already run successfully in politics, the guide is useful for beginners.

"We know what the reality is, and there's still sexual stereotypes that male candidates just don't face," she said.

"It's important to have an understanding of that context before you head down that road."

Liberal motion urges Tories to stop muzzling scientists

PARLIAMENT

Conservatives deny claims of censorship, reject proposals

Michael Woods Metro | Ottawa

A new "chief science officer" position should be created to help ensure government research is accessible and federal scientists aren't muzzled, the Liberals said Tuesday.

A Liberal motion debated in the House of Commons called on the government to "immediately rescind all rules and regulations that muzzle government scientists."

The motion, led by Kingston MP Ted Hsu, said the government has constrained federal scientists' ability to share their research and muzzled them by preventing them from speaking to the media about their work.

"The public must be confident that the information comes directly from scientists and is free from partisan political influence," Hsu said in the Commons.

The motion suggested two measures: That the government create a central portal for government-funded science so the public can view it and appoint a chief science officer who would advise the prime minister and ensure government science is accessible.

"We want to give that person the responsibility for making sure that the government science is accessible to people ... and that scientists are able to speak freely about their research," Hsu said in an interview with Metro on Tuesday.

The Conservative majority defeated the motion Tuesday evening, 145-119. But

Hsu said prior to the vote he was still looking forward to a "clash of ideas."

And he said the Liberals will include the proposals in their platform for the upcoming federal election.

The Conservatives contend that they do not muzzle scientists, pointing to the hundreds of media interviews that researchers in various departments conduct and the funding they have devoted to science and technology research.

"Why would we put that kind of money to support scientists when he claims we're muzzling them?" Ed Holder, the minister of state for science and technology, asked in the Commons.

The Conservatives also pointed out that they created the Science, Technology and Innovation Council in 2007, comprising 18 experts with a mandate to advise the government.

But the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada, the union representing more than 15,000 federal scientists and researchers, has pushed for policies enforcing "scientific integrity" at the bargaining table, including the right for scientists to speak freely without political interference.

Katie Gibbs, executive director of the non-partisan group Evidence for Democracy, applauded Hsu's proposals.

"There's a pretty compelling body of evidence that shows that they're being muzzled," she said, including "over a dozen incredibly well-documented cases of very explicit censorship of government scientists."

Man continues fight for citizenship with federal government

A man who says he has been rendered stateless by the Canadian government continued his fight for citizenship in federal court on Tuesday.

Deepan Budlakoti, 25, was born in Ottawa to Indian parents. Four years ago, he was suddenly told that he's not a Canadian citizen, despite being issued a Canadian birth certificate and passport.

He is asking that his citizenship be reinstated and argues that the government is infringing on his charter rights to enter, remain in or leave Canada, and to life, liberty and security of the person.

If this can happen to me, it's setting a new precedent in Canada.

Deepan Budlakoti

"I'm born and raised in Canada, and the government's trying to deport me to a country where I've never been to," he told Metro on Tuesday. "The state has induced me to become stateless."

Budlakoti was ordered out of Canada due to drug and firearms convictions, a ruling he challenged. The government argues he didn't become a Canadian at birth because his parents were employed by the Indian High Commission.

India has denied he is a citizen of that country or that he is entitled to citizenship.

A Federal Court judge ruled against Budlakoti last September, disagreeing with his argument that his parents quit the Indian High Commission in June 1989, months before he was born.

He filed an appeal. On Tuesday, the Federal Court of Appeal heard his case, with the three judges reserving their decision.

Among his concerns, he says, is "if this can happen to me, it's setting a new precedent in Canada" for others the government wishes to deport.

For a time, Budlakoti wasn't allowed to work, but he said Tuesday he got a work permit from Federal Court a month and a half ago. He's looking for employment, but also spending time and money campaigning on his own behalf, including raising money to help with his legal fees.

Mounties rack up pricey hotel bill

SPENDING

$3.2 M set aside for Parliament Hill stays: Docs

The RCMP has earmarked $275,000 a month to cover hotel bills for officers brought in from across the country to bolster security on Parliament Hill.

Extra Mounties have been reassigned in the wake of the Oct. 22 attack on Parliament to deal with what the RCMP has called a "critical shortage" of manpower.

The RCMP has been tapping its new recruits to help fill the gaps. As new officers graduate from "Depot" — the RCMP's training academy in Regina — they've been getting short-term assignments to Ottawa to patrol Parliament Hill.

One or two "troops" of RCMP cadets at a time — 30 to 60 officers — are being rotated through the capital on two-month assignments before being sent to their first permanent postings, one source familiar with the arrangements said.

But that influx of officers has meant a big hotel bill for the national police force.

In a projection done last November, the RCMP budgeted $1.2 million for hotel accommodation up to March, 2015 and another $2 million for the period April to December 2015, according to documents obtained by Torstar News Service under access to information legislation.

With tax, the RCMP earmarked a total of $3.6 million, or about $275,000 a month for hotel bills.

Asked about the hotel bills, a spokesperson for the force said the figure was only a projected expense.

"This is not the actual cost spent, but was part of an initial purchase requisition prior to negotiations," Brigitte Mineault said in an email.

However, the RCMP refused to say how much it was actually spending on hotel costs, telling Torstar to file another access to information request to get that information.

The police force also refused to say how many officers it has brought in from out of town, citing security concerns.

However, the documents suggest that manpower woes were felt by most of the RCMP units responsible for securing sensitive sites — and people — in the capital as security was ramped up after the Oct. 22 attack. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Immigration ranking drops

Canada's fall on global index due to Ottawa's policies: Group

Canada has dropped out of the top five countries in integrating immigrants into the society due to policy changes by Ottawa to restrict access to family reunification and citizenship for newcomers.

According to the latest world ranking by a Brussels-based think tank, Canada has slipped from third to sixth place among 38 developed countries in allowing migrants access to equal rights, support and opportunities.

Although Canada is still considered a welcoming country for newcomers amid the global anti-immigration and anti-terror tide, the Migrant Integration Policy Index (MIPEX) says its policy shift to the right raises questions about the future of the country's traditionally inclusive integration system.

"It is a cause of concern, one that we need to watch," said Thomas Huddleston of the Migration Policy Group, lead author of the European Union-funded, peer-reviewed index. Canada's 2015 MIPEX profile will be released in Toronto Wednesday.

Based on a detailed checklist of 167 indicators, researchers surveyed the latest government policies in affording migrants access to eight areas: labour market mobility, family reunion, education, health, political participation, permanent residence, access to nationality and antidiscrimination efforts.

"One key to Canada's immigration model has been that selected immigrants arrive as permanent residents with equal rights to invest in their integration and quickly become full Canadian citizens," says the 2015 MIPEX profile on Canada.

"The increasing number of temporary workers may also be discouraged and delayed to invest with integration, as they have limited opportunities to try out new jobs or trainings, learn English or French for free or become permanent residents, citizens and voters."

Professor Harald Bauder, academic director of the Ryerson Centre for Immigration and Settlement, said he was surprised Canada still fared quite well in light of the dramatic changes made to the immigration and refugee system by the Conservative government.

"Maybe, when compared to the significant changes made by countries all across the map, we're still doing quite well despite the damages inflicted by Ottawa's policy changes," Bauder said. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Conservative MP Michael Chong is seen in 2013. Chong got a rough ride from some of his own caucus colleagues as he promoted his Reform Act at a Senate committee Tuesday. The act is billed as a way to rebalance power between members of Parliament and party leaders.

Reform Act gets a bumpy ride

Prospects are looking grim for Michael Chong's legislative baby, the Reform Act 2014.

Conservative senators from Chong's caucus — along with some Liberals — laid out their opposition to parts of the private member's bill Tuesday at the Senate rules committee.

That's a strong signal that the proposed legislation, which is designed to give MPs more power in the Commons, will not get through the upper chamber without amendments.

Amendments would be the kiss of death for the bill, which would then go back to the House of Commons for more votes. There's less than a month before the two houses rise for the summer; an election campaign will dissolve Parliament in the fall.

So is Chong's bill being killed by the Prime Minister's Office through the Senate? If so, it would be an ironic turn of events, given that the bill is supposed to temper the power of party leaders. Chong said he does not know if his Senate colleagues have been coached to make sure the bill doesn't see the light of day — but he warned that voters are watching.

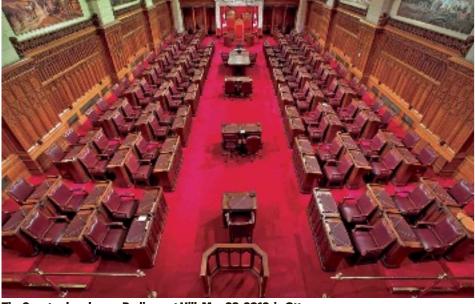

"It potentially could become an election issue," Chong said after the meeting.

The act is billed as a way to rebalance power between members of Parliament and party leaders.

One section would remove the veto power of party leaders over who gets to run in a federal election — a stick that leaders have brandished over MPs to ensure caucus discipline.

Senate expenses referee chosen

Up to 40 senators will have spending challenged

The Senate is turning to a former justice of the Supreme Court of Canada to referee any disputes arising among senators over dubious expense claims flagged by the auditor general.

It's the latest attempt by the Senate to get ahead of what is widely expected to be a critical report on past spending practices.

Ian Binnie will be called to intervene in cases where senators who are ordered to pay back disallowed expense claims opt to challenge either the findings of the report or the amount they are required to repay.

But Binnie may not be that busy. Senators have already started repaying expense claims questioned by auditor general Michael Ferguson, ensuring they won't go to arbitration.

The repayments started shortly after Ferguson's audit teams walked into Senate offices almost two years ago and, according to Senate sources, have picked up steam in recent weeks since senators received their final audit results.

"Once we have the report we'll be able to determine who has repaid and whether that amount matches the amount in the report," said Senate spokeswoman Nancy Durning. "All amounts owing and paid will be made public, whether they happened before or after the report is released."

Senate sources who are familiar with the auditor's work say Ferguson is expected to recommend that 10 cases be referred to the RCMP.

Up to 30 other senators are expected to face repayment orders worth thousands — as high as $20,000 in at least one case — over travel claims that didn't involve Senate business, as well as questionable office contracts and housing claims.

Ferguson's report is expected to be delivered to the Senate some time next week.

Progress on veterans' issues: Ombudsman

An analysis of whether the Conservative government is living up to its promises to improve the delivery of benefits for veterans suggests things are moving in a positive direction, the veterans' ombudsman says.

Veterans and the government still aren't in sync on what programs and services ought to look like, but there's been progress, Guy Parent said in an interview Tuesday. "We haven't closed any gaps but certainly there are some being narrowed," Parent said.

It's been nearly a year since the House of Commons veterans affairs committee made 14 recommendations on improving the New Veterans Charter, the 2006 document that changed how benefits are delivered. The ombudsman has been calling for changes to various elements of the policy in a series of reports beginning in 2013.

Ontario hazelnut growers to pick up slack from B.C. blight to feed Canadians' appetite for hazelnuts as the industry deals with a worldwide shortage, skyhigh prices and the spread of nutkilling blight in British Columbia.

The Ontario Hazelnut Association says Ontario farmers will harvest more than 240 hectares of the crop this year, up from 40 hectares last year.

B.C., which had 330 hectares of hazelnut-producing orchards as recently as 2012, saw its harvest fall by more than 60 per cent last year and 2015 promises to be even worse.

Linda Grimo, whose family has been growing hazelnuts in Niagara-on-the-Lake, Ont., since 1972, said that gives Ontario growers a "huge opportunity" in the market. "I call it untapped potential," she said. "The demand is so great and the supply is so low."

Two years of poor harvests in Turkey, which produces more than two-thirds of the world's hazelnuts, and the spread of Eastern Filbert Blight across B.C. and nut trees in less than a decade if left untreated, have caused global hazelnut prices to triple since the first months of last year.

"Every day is a new record high," said Ådam Johnston, a trader with UK-based Freeworld Trading. Buyers such as Ferrero SpA, which uses the nut in its Ferrero Rocher chocolates and Nutella spread, will "pay any price" for the necessary ingredient in their products, Johnston said. THE CANADIAN PRESS

MURDER CONVICTION

Pamela Smart maintains innocence

A woman whose book To Die For was inspired by the case of Pamela Smart, who plotted with her teenage lover to kill her husband, is asking the governor to consider parole.

Smart, who began a torrid affair with 15-year-old Billy Flynn when she was a media co-ordinator at his high school, was convicted in 1991 of being an accomplice to first-degree murder and was sentenced to life in prison without the chance of parole. The lurid details of the trial aired gavel to gavel on television, and the case became an instant tabloid sensation.

Joyce Maynard's 1992 book, influenced by the Smart case, later was adapted into a movie starring Nicole Kidman.

In the letter to Governor Maggie Hassan, dated March 3 but recently shared with media, Maynard writes that she didn't intend her work of fiction to shape the public perception of Smart.

"At the time the jury reached its verdict in the Smart case, my novel was a full year away from publication," Maynard wrote.

"But if the existence of the film and adaptation of the book has contributed in any way to a public perception of Pamela killer, I will say: this was not my intent."

Flynn pleaded guilty to second-degree murder and testi-

Smart as a ruthlessly ambitious

Flynn pleaded guilty to second-degree murder and testified that Smart threatened to break up with him if he didn't kill her husband, Gregory. He admitted pulling the trigger.

Smart admitted having an affair with Flynn but denied planning the murder. She unsuccessfully sought a pardon a decade ago, saying her trial was tainted by intense media coverage.

Then-Governor John Lynch and the executive council, a five-member elected body that considers pardons, appointments and state contracts, were unmoved by letters proclaiming Smart's innocence and good deeds in prison; Smart earned two master's degrees and worked as a teacher's aide and counsellor to other inmates.

The governor and council denied her a pardon hearing.

NIGERIA

Government to pay to end fuel crisis government's payout to the Independent Petroleum Marketers Association of Nigeria.

$800 M

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Nigeria's outgoing government has agreed to pay a debt of $800 million to resolve a monthslong fuel crisis crippling the economy days before the inauguration of a new president in the country, oil suppliers said Wednesday.

Chaos reigned Tuesday at Nigerian airports where most flights were cancelled. Foreign airlines flew to other African countries to refuel. Cars and other vehicles formed queues two and three deep blocking roads for more than 2 kilometres outside of gas stations. Attendants turned away people carrying yellow cans to buy kerosene for cooking. There was none.

Banks started closing at lunchtime on Monday and cellphone companies warned they would be forced to shut down service countrywide for lack of diesel to fuel generators.

Nigeria — Africa's biggest oil producer — generates more than 2 million barrels of petroleum a day but imports the refined product because its refineries are not maintained.

A woeful national grid that offers only a few hours of electricity on a good day failed to generate any electricity recently because of shortages of thermal gas to fire its generators. That leaves all businesses and homes that can afford it dependent on diesel-powered generators. The country frequently suffers fuel shortages, but the disruption caused by the latest is unprecedented.

Presidentelect Buhari's party accused President Goodluck Jonathan's administration of sabotage to ensure it inherits "a nation in crisis."

Nigeria's government, hit by halved prices for the petroleum that provides 80 per cent of its revenue and a massive slump in its naira currency, has been borrowing to pay salaries.

Suppliers worried they would not be paid by the incoming government of Muhammadu Buhari, who has pledged to fight endemic corruption.

🛑 IN BRIEF

Assassination attempted on Libyan Prime Minister

Gunmen tried to assassinate Libya's internationally recognized prime minister on his way to the airport in the eastern city of Tobruk on Tuesday, a spokesman for his government said.

Arish Said, head of the government's media department, said that Prime Minister Abdullah al-Thinni's motorcade was attacked and one of his guards was lightly wounded but that there were no fatalities.

"They managed to escape," Said said.

Prior to the attack, he said armed men who had been protesting outside a session of the Tobruk government's House of Representatives tried to storm the building, firing shots into the air and demanding al-Thinni be removed from office

They were "threatening to kill the prime minister and force the House to sack him," Said said. He identified the men as being funded by "corrupted political financiers" linked to powerful Tobruk tribal leaders, without elaborating.

The session was postponed until next week before the attempted assassination. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS metr® NEWS | World Wednesday, May 27, 2015 | 13

25 historic objects were looted over many decades

The United States on Tuesday officially returned 25 artifacts looted over the decades from Italy, including Etruscan vases, first-century frescoes and precious books that ended up in U.S. museums, universities and private collections.

Italy has been on a campaign to recover looted artifacts, using the courts and public shaming to compel museums and collectors to return them, and has won back several important pieces.

The items Tuesday were either spontaneously turned over to U.S. authorities or seized by police after investigators noticed them in Christie's and Sotheby's auction catalogues, gallery listings, or as a result of customs searches, court cases and tips.

One 17th-century Venetian cannon was seized by Boston border patrol agents as it was being smuggled from Egypt to the U.S. inside construction equipment, police said.

U.S. Ambassador John Phillips joined Italy's carabinieri art police to show off the haul. It included Etruscan vases from the Toledo Museum of Art and the Minneapolis Institute of Arts, 17th-century botany books from Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, and a manuscript from the 1500s stolen from the Turin archdiocese in 1990 that ended up listed in the University of South Florida's special collections.

"Italy is blessed with a rich cultural legacy and therefore cursed to suffer the pillaging of important cultural artifacts," Phillips said, adding that Interpol estimates the illicit trade in cultural heritage produces more than $9 billion in profits each year.

Police said several of the items were allegedly sold by Italian dealers Giacomo Medici and Gianfranco Becchina, both convicted of trafficking in plundered Roman artifacts.

After the objects were recovered, Italian authorities confirmed their provenance.

Police stressed that most collectors and museums willingly gave up the artifacts after learning they had been stolen.

The Minneapolis museum director contacted the Italian culture ministry after reading an article about one suspect piece, police said.

Phillips praised the collaboration between Italy's police and U.S. Homeland Security and border patrol agents. He also said the U.S. had returned more than 7,600 objects to over 30 countries and foreign citizens since 2007. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS lucky, the popularity of the Las Vegas championship's newest event could cause a poker chip shortage.

World Series of Poker begins

The annual set of 68 tournaments at the Rio All-Suite Hotel & Casino that rewards millions of dollars to the best card sharks starts Wednesday with a new event dubbed the Colossus expected to attract at least 10,000 players.

The Colossus represents the lowest buy-in in 35 years with players ponying up $565 US each to win their share of a $5 million prize pool, with the winner likely walking away with nearly $600,000.

The 45-year-old event now owned by Caesars Interactive Entertainment Inc. is also spreading the wealth for its $10,000 no-limit Texas Hold 'Em main event and hosting an online tournament that will end with a live poker matchup.

The World Series of Poker drew 82,360 players last year with 10 per cent winning some of the $227.7 million in prize

Lance Bradley, the editor in chief of poker news site Bluff. com, said the series has long worked to widen its appeal. But this year appeared to be unusually ambitious, catering to the regular guy who doesn't mind parting with $565 but would blush at spending $1,000, while still attracting "the pros who don't want to play against those guys."

ASYLUM SEEKERS

EU to relocate 40,000 migrants

The European Union will seek to shift the migration burden away from Italy and Greece by relocating 40,000 asylum seekers to other EU countries, according to a draft document seen by The Associated Press Tuesday.

The relocation proposal, to be unveiled by the EU's executive Commission on Wednesday, would see new Syrian and Eritrean asylum seekers shared among 23 of the 28 member countries over the next two years. Britain, Denmark and Ireland will not take part.

The move comes as the number of desperate migrants crossing the Mediterranean to get to Europe continues to rise, with more than 80,000 landing so far this year. The International Organization for Migration estimates that 1,820 other migrants

Spike in female suicide bombers: UN

Children are now being seen as potential threats after an "alarming spike" in suicide bombings by girls and women being used by Boko Haram militants in northeastern Nigeria, the UN children's agency said Tuesday.

The number of reported suicide attacks has jumped to 27 in the first five months of this year compared to 26 for all of last year, it said.

Tuesday's report came as Gov. Kashim Shettima of Borno state visited the site of the latest Boko Haram attack and surveyed the damage: 37 people killed Sunday, 400 buildings razed, including mosques, and 22 vehicles and dozens of motorcycles

"I appeal to you not to flee from your homes. We assure you that we are going to rebuild the ancient town of Gubio," Shettima pleaded.

But locals said hundreds of traumatized residents have already fled to Maiduguri, the Borno state capital 90 kilometres away.

A civilian self-defence fighter, Yusuf Modu Gubio, said he killed some insurgents in Sunday's attack but "to my surprise, they were mostly young boys and teenagers."

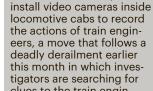

It's not known how many thousands of boys, girls and women have been kidnapped by Boko Haram but new abductions are being reported every week. UNICEF said it estimates that 743,000 children have been uprooted by the nearly 6-year-old Islamic uprising, with as many as 10,000 separated from their families in the chaos.

It said women and children have carried out three-quarters of all reported Boko Harem suicide bombings — with girls blamed for nine such attacks since July.

"They are first and foremost victims — not perpetrators, said Jean Gough, the UNICEF representative in Nigeria.

The agency is concerned that children will increasingly be perceived as "potential threats," putting them in danger of retaliation and jeopardizing their return home.

U.K. eyes future of the EU

EUROPEAN UNION

Cameron trip focuses on differences over autonomy

British Prime Minister David Cameron heads to continental Europe this week on a campaign to curtail EU involvement in national affairs.

France and Germany, meanwhile, want to move in the opposite direction.

Which formula is more likely to ensure the EU's survival is the issue Cameron will face on his trip — and the existential question the European Union is facing in the months to come.

Cameron is visiting Denmark, the Netherlands, France, Germany and Poland as he launches his mission to scale back the EU's political powers over member states on sensitive issues such as migration and welfare.

Without such changes, Britons may vote to pull the U.K. out of the EU altogether in a referendum Cameron has

But France and Germany, whose post-war alliance formed the backbone of today's EU, have their own mission.

Cameron's official spokesman, Jean-Christophe Gray, said Tuesday that discussions about the eurozone shouldn't affect Cameron's trip this week. Britain does not use the euro.

But he conceded that the prime minister's trip might not be easy.

"Of course you'll have reports of ups and downs," Gray told reporters in London. "But he is very clear about the mandate that he has and his determination to secure the best deal for the British people."

The conflicting initiatives are not necessarily mutually exclusive. But they do highlight a fundamental cross-Channel rift, with Britain ever more reluctant to throw in its lot with the other EU nations under the leadership of juggernauts Germany and France.

Alain Dauvergne, an adviser at France's Our Europe institute, said Cameron is unlikely to win immediate support this week for his campaign, but is launching an "exploration" to establish how far EU partners are willing to go to give him "window dressing" that he can bring back to British voters to keep them from leaving the EU.

NORWAY

Laureates to world: Wake up to tragedy in Myanmar

An international gathering about the plight of Myanmar's persecuted Rohingya Muslims boasts a star-studded cast, with three Nobel Peace Prize laureates among those calling on the world to wake up to the unfolding tragedy.

But fellow winner and prodemocracy icon Aung San Suu Kyi will not be among them. She wasn't invited.

During her 15 years under house arrest, Suu Kyi won admiration across the globe for her fiery speeches and scathing criticism of the military regime that ruled Myanmar, or Burma, at the time.

After her release in 2010, when ruling generals handed over power to a nominally civilian government, she won a seat in parliament

The 69-year-old says she is a politician and that she never sought to be a human rights champion. Critics note she is carefully choosing her battles, in part because she has presidential ambitions.

In a predominantly Buddhist country of 50 million people, where there is much animosity toward the 1.3 million Rohingya Muslims, Suu Kyi has opted to remain silent, even as the world watched in horror while more than 3,000 hungry, dehydrated Rohingya and Bangladeshi migrants washed ashore in Malaysia, Indonesia and Thailand this month, according to the U.N. refugee agency.

The international gathering at the Nobel Institute in Oslo, Norway, was opened Tuesday by former Norwegian prime minister Kjell Magne Bondevik. His country pledged $1.3 million to help Rohingya in Myanmar's Rakhine state by improving living conditions, preventing people from fleeing by sea and curbing tensions between ethnic groups.

The meeting featured video statements from Nobel laureates Desmond Tutu, Jose Ramos-Horta and Mairead Maguire, and others like philanthropist George Soros, who escaped Nazi-occupied Hungary.

Soros said that "the most immediate threat to Burma's transition is the rising anti-Muslim sentiment."

"As a Jew in Budapest, I too was a Rohingya," he said in a video statement. "The parallels to the Nazi genocide are alarming. Fortunately, we have not reached a stage of mass killing."

The messages focused on ways to end the decades-long persecution of Rohingya and the need to speak out.

ROHINGYA MIGRANTS

Forensics teams dig up graves

Malaysian forensics teams exhumed a body from a shallow grave Tuesday at an abandoned jungle camp used by human traffickers, the first of what police predicted would be more grim findings as they search through a cluster of illicit hideouts near the border with Thailand.

Authorities say there are 139 suspected graves in the mountainous jungle where northern Malaysia meets southern Thailand, a remote area that trafficking syndicates used as a transit point to hold migrants and refugees. Most were believed to be members of Myanmar's persecuted Rohingya Muslim minority and impoverished migrants from Bangladesh.

"Forensics teams have found one human body so far," said Mohammad Bahar Alias, a senior police official from northern Perlis state. Digging continued at other graves, which police said were marked by sticks or stones. "There are graves all over this area."

Malaysian police took journalists to one of 28 abandoned camps found after a regional crackdown was launched on human trafficking earlier this month.

The camp, reached after a two-hour hike up a steep jungle path, appeared to have been abandoned a while ago, police said. A jungle prison remained that included at least two large wooden pens wrapped with barbed wire.

"These structures were believed to be used as human cages," said Mohammad Bahar. He said the camp may have held up to 300 people.

It also contained a watch tower and a cooking area littered with dishes and pots. During the tour, authorities pointed out what looked like the skeletal remains of a jaw on the ground.

"We think it belongs to a human," said Mohammad Bahar.

A tiny orange slipper was partly buried on a nearby slope, indicating that children were also held at the camp, which could hold at least 300 people, he said. A suspected grave site was about 100 metres away.

The discoveries in the northern Malaysian state of Perlis follow similar revelations earlier this month in Thailand, where police unearthed dozens of bodies from shallow graves on the Thai side of the border. Thai police Maj. Gen. Puthichart Ekkachan said 36 bodies were found there in seven abandoned camps.

FAMILY BUSINESS

Beau's Brewery keeps it all in the family

Family is everything at Beau's Brewery.

Tim and his son, Steve Beauchesne, came up with the brewery idea on a sunny patio in 2004. They both had other jobs, but loved the idea of working together on something they felt passionate about. They wanted to make tasty and unique beers from the highest quality all-natural ingredients.

Two years later, on the July long weekend in 2006, the first pint of Beau's flagship Lug Tread Lagered Ale was poured at Beau's Brewery in Vankleek Hill.

By then, Tim's wife, Denise, and Steve's sister, Jennifer, and brother, Philip, were involved. Soon, other members of the family, various cousins and in-laws and friends were hired.

Today, there are 130 employees, still mostly family and friends.

"Family as co-workers are incredibly loyal," Steve says. "You don't need to worry so much about them quitting or taking another job, the job really becomes intertwined with daily life, and it's not just a job anymore.

"It's sometimes a challenge to separate the boardroom table from the dining room table and to keep the relationships inside and outside of work solid and healthy, but it's a challenge that's worth it."

There is also a lot of passion, strong leadership, and ethics at work.

In 2010, the company was named family enterprise of the year by the Canadian Association of Family Enterprise (CAFE).

Beau's was the first B Corp brewery in Canada (the global designation identifies social and environmental responsibility and performance).

KIDS CAN BE KIDS AT CAT'S

DOWN-EAST FARE

It's hard to miss Cat's Fish and Chips on St. Laurent, with its bright blue exterior and seascape mural.

From the coastal scene of a fishing boat and lighthouse painted along one wall to the ship's wheel waiting to be given a whirl outside the restaurant's entrance, Cat's playful welcome is everywhere.

Well-shaded picnic tables on the wooden deck create a perfect place to crack a cold brew and enjoy skipper Dave's breaded or beer-battered fish and chips tucked into a basket.

Local beers on the menu include Big Rig Gold, Rideau Red Beer, Broadhead Grindstone Ale, Longshot Wheat and Darkhorse Stout. Cat's Fish and Chips also offers cans of Nicklebrook gluten-free beer.

And that's not the only gluten-free item on the menu. The skipper has a gluten-free batter in his repertoire so everyone can enjoy Cat's down-east fare. Named for Cat, wife of skipper Dave, the restaurant is family run, and family friendly. There is a Sea Urchin menu for children 12 and younger (and for those 70 and older). Cat's is "where kids can be kids no matter what their age," the skipper says.

Cat's Fish and Chips ample menu also includes a dessert called the Life Ring, which is scoop of ice cream in a homemade chocolate doughnut drizzled with chocolate and caramel sauce — it's enough to leave you feeling buoyed, or sunk.

Cutting-edge solutions for better health

NutriChem advises patients

NutriChem opened its doors more than 30 years ago after newly minted pharmacist Kent MacLeod took over a bankrupt drug store on Richmond Road in Ottawa's west end Concerned about customers whose health didn't seem to be improving, MacLeod began dispensing advice as well — advising patients on how to change their diet or their lifestyle to help improve the quality of their lives. MacLeod's advice proved to be so popular that patients would line up to speak to him, and an on-site clinic was added in 2000. To meet demand in Ottawa's east end, NutriChem opened a second clinic and retail store in 2013 on St. Laurent Boulevard.

"Even with the expansion, NutriChem is still considered a family business," says Kate Pollon-MacLeod, director of communications and MacLeod's eldest daughter.

MacLeod's wife, Linda Pollon, joined the company 20 years ago after leaving a busy law practice and is now the chief executive office of NutriChem. All four of their children either currently work or have worked in all aspects of the business. MacLeod even has his retired father, John, making deliveries around the city for the company.

As a compounding pharmacy, NutriChem offers its patients individual solutions to traditional ways of treating illness. Compounding simply means they can create customized medications.

NutriChem can turn a hard-to-swallow pill into a smaller capsule or a lozenge. Patients with sensitivities to dyes or allergens can have their prescriptions tailor-made without any fillers or preservatives. NutriChem can even turn your puppy's prescription into tasty doggy treats — in consultation with your veterinarian, of course.

Depression is another area where NutriChem deploys both its expertise and compounding pharmaceutical

When the side-effects of antidepressants make patients feel worse, NutriChem uses compounding to gradually taper a patient's dosage, weaning them off their medication gradually. Meanwhile, NutriChem assesses the patient, tries to stabilize any biochemical abnormalities, develops a customized multivitamin and makes nutritional and lifestyle recommendations to optimize the patient's health.

After more than three decades, founder MacLeod and NutriChem's services are as in-demand as ever. NutriChem continues to be a leader in finding cutting-edge solutions to the most complex of health problems.

8 Many products are grown in-house (in one of the 17 greenhouses), and acclimatized to the regional weather.

The nursery carries more than 2,500 varieties of all varieties of plants, everything from annuals, perennials, vines, herbs and roses to shrubs, trees, vegetable plants, fruit trees, and unusual varieties.

"It's a one-stop shop for all your gardening needs," Estelle Laporte says. J.A. Laporte sells a wide variety of dry goods such as seeds, bulbs, fertilizers, lawn care products, soil, compost, mulches, grav el, gardening tools and decorative stones, pots and garden ornaments. The store also provides landscape design and installation as well as delivery services.

PROFESSIONAL ADVICE FOR FREE

AT UPPER ROOM HOME FURNISHINGS

When it comes to decorating your home, a little professional advice can make all the difference in the world. And when that service is available to you for free, benefitting from an interior designer is the smart choice.

"This is an added value to our customer—there's no fee, it's 100 per cent free," says Allan Nolan, president, The Upper Room Home Furnishings.

"We want our customers to be very satisfied with their purchase."

An interior designer can help customers find the perfect products, styles, and accents, some of which the customer might not realize are options.

"People may shop for furniture once every five or seven years," Nolan says. "They may not know what's available in the industry, but that's what our interior designers are there for."

The service is free and that includes a nopressure environment.

"The idea of offering interior design services for free is to relieve the customer of that pressure," he says. "You make the final choices and if you don't like what your designer is presenting, you can try another

For those who think a designer may not be for them, Nolan encourages customers to examine the advantages.

A custom look for your tastes

Custom style doesn't have to come at a premium cost. And thanks to The Upper Room Home Furnishings, you can craft a home furnishing that effectively combines form and function in a way that's uniquely you.

For many, the idea of custom-crafted furniture comes with a premium price tag, but Allan Nolan, The Upper Room's president, says that's just not the case.

"There's no cost differential whether they're getting something as shown or they're having it custom designed," Nolan says. "In many cases, it can even be cheaper."

Custom furniture is not just a rich man or woman's game, he says.

"It's not based on affluence, it's based on taste level. Someone who enjoys fashion or is fashion-forward is going to place the same value on their home furnishings."

The Upper Room offers complementary

Feds plan exploration of new savings options for Canadians

The Harper government says it will explore giving people the option to pump more of their earnings into the Canada Pension Plan to boost their retirement savings.

The government will consult experts and stakeholders this summer as it looks for ways to allow Canadians to make voluntary add-on contributions to the Canada Pension Plan, Finance Minister Joe Oliver told the House of Commons on Tuesday.

"We believe that Canadians are best placed to decide how to save for their retirement with voluntary options," Oliver said in a statement.

"That is why we intend to consult on giving Canadians the voluntary option to contribute more to the Canada Pension Plan.'

Oliver emphasized people should have choices when it comes to their retirement savings, rather than mandatory payments. He said the government aims to build on other voluntary savings options already available, such as the pooled, registered pension plan.

Provinces such as Ontario have lead a provincial push to enhance the CPP, but Ottawa has said it wanted to avoid saddling employees and employers with higher premiums.

Instead, Ottawa has endorsed other pension-related reforms. Retirement income is ex-

THE BIG THING: DIY LYME TREATMENTS

A range of untested and unorthodox treatments for Lyme disease are being promoted and sold on the Internet, says a new study in the journal Clinical Infectious Diseases. It raises the alarm about therapies marketed to people who believe they have an unproven condition they call chronic Lyme disease. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Google

The efficacy of most treatments hawked online is completely implausible, the study found. However, some are potentially dangerous, and others — like a device that claims to kill bacteria by beaming light through the skin — cost as much as $13,000. Magnets, stem cell transplants and urine therapy (as in drinking one's own) all have devotees

The trouble with ticks Lyme disease is an infection caused by Borrelia bacteria. It spreads through tick bites. Symptoms can last for months and include fever, a round rash around the bite, joint pain, facial palsy, and less commonly, potentially life-threatening swelling of the brain or spinal cord. A short course of antibiotics is the usual treatment.

The struggle to limit screen time — for cats

SOCIAL DISCOURSE
Omar
Mouallem

I'm no longer the only one in my house addicted to technology. My cat Darwin is, too.

It started with one iPad app, Paint for Cats, which hilariously teases her with a cartoon mouse that squeaks and leaves behind multicoloured paw prints each time it's attacked. Now the paw prints are real, and they're all over my tablet, phone and TV screens.

Like most cats, she doesn't respond to her name. Yet the clicking of the Netflix menu is enough to bring her inside from the balcony, whether or not the dragonfly she's torturing at the moment is dead yet. She finds the spasmodic scrolling irresistible, and cries when it stops because she's blocking the remote sensor. She howls even louder when I decide on something to watch.

Darwin's not the only one with a problem. At least one SPCA, in Los Angeles, started accepting tablets as donations — and it's not to entertain the volunteers. Not primarily, anyway.

There's now a cottage industry of tailor-made videos and apps for cats. Little Hiccup, makers of Paint For Cats, which by 2012 had been downloaded over 300,000 times, have two other offerings. There's also Crazy Cat for Android, popular enough to earn 3,000-plus mostly positive reviews, and Enjoy With Cat, a two-player game for felines and their human companions. Not to be outdone, the cat-food brand Friskies now offers its own promotional cat games, which have been downloaded two million times so far.

There are many more but they're all engineered in the same way, with quick and jerky objects, according to Dr. Bonnie Beaver, executive director of the American College of Veterinary Behaviourists. As she recently explained to the Associated Press, "Cats are attracted to things that move, and that is the 'magic' for most of the apps."

It helps that cats, unlike dogs, have fast-adjusting pupils and depth perception and colour definition closer to our own. But while the harms of overusing computers are well documented for humans, could this digital catnip also be damaging and potentially distressing?

I'm wondering because these new gadgets have definitely had an effect on my pet parenting.

The morning after I first played Darwin her favourite YouTube video — 16 minutes of birds and squirrels — I found her waiting for me on the closed laptop, sitting regally and wide-eyed. Now I find it a handy distraction when her incessant nagging interferes with my work or my own enjoyment of the Internet.

It seems cats love the Internet as much as it loves them. There's now a cottage industry of apps for cats.

I can justify it as escapism for a housebound pet. I'm offering a healthy outlet for her basic instincts. But I know I'm really just suppressing her neediness — a quality only a dog owner could love.

So like a guilty but helpless parent, I just plop her in front of another screen. It's bad, I know. But it works.

Sexual assault against men is less common, but no less traumatic

Angela Mullins

Maybe I should start a men's movement.

"You may as well," my wife told me the other day. She'd just endured my latest rant about a public-service announcement about sexual harassment and abuse.

The Ontario government ad is a universal case study in playing to the majority and ignoring the minority with hopes of creating change for all. What could have been a powerful message about everyone doing their part to make a difference has become part of an all-too-common narrative in our post-Jian Ghomeshi, post-Bill Cosby, still-unfolding Canadian military scandal reality. Men are perverse, women are victims.

For those who haven't seen it, the video plays out something like this: Four women are shown as victims, fielding everything from unwanted shoulder rubbing to having roofies slipped into a drink. At the end of it all, you're asked #WhoWillYouHelp.

The settings for the vile acts range from an office to what we can assume is a high school hallway. The women are from a wide range of ethnic backgrounds. Their ages vary. The same is true for the people taking advantage of them.

It's obvious the creators tried really, really hard to make the message relevant for everyone. Problem is, they missed the mark.

In the 61-second warning not to treat people like objects, every one of the predators has a penis.

I have, of course, seen the statistics. Although the numbers vary based on the source, about 80 per cent of sex crimes are directed at women. The abuse women face is generally more violent. And, because of that, they're more likely to die at the hands of their abusers.

But, for those men who do become targets, being a victim is, I'd imagine, no less painful and no less soul-sapping.

Despite the position of power they generally occupy due to the luck of chromosomal pairings alone, men have, in this instance, been swept under the rug. Those who dare mention their place in the sexual-abuse conversation run the risk of being considered anti-woman or, even worse, pigs.

It's sad that we've come to this point. Working against assault is, at its very root about treating everyone with respect and dignity, regardless of their gender or how likely they are to become victims.

To earnestly fight sexual assault, government campaigns — and others for that matter — must be all-inclusive, representing people of all stripes and, I hope, prompting storylines we've never heard.

Perhaps what I really should do is start a human movement

Our slogan? How about: "Hey, hey, ho, ho, a collective conscience is the way to go."

Rosemary Westwood will return Thursday.

The one-man show of Oyelowo

HBO MOVIE

Selma actor rises to his role in Nightingale

Lisa Weidenfeld Metro | New York

While actor David Oyelowo might be best known to some audiences for his stellar performance as Martin Luther King Jr. in the epic civil rights drama Selma, by the time he filmed his breakthrough role, he'd already completed work on Nightingale.

The movie, which stars only him and premieres on HBO this Friday at 9 p.m., tells the story of the deteriorating mental state of a vet named Peter Snowden as he tries to keep his life together after committing a very brutal act. Oyelowo is virtually unrecognizable as the same performer who played Dr. King — the only parallel between the movies is that they're both produced by Brad Pitt's production company, Plan B. We talked to him about being your own co-star and working with Pitt.

The film occasionally feels almost like a play, in the sense that it's a one-man show. Did that have any impact on how you made it's I did learn it like a great big monologue. I didn't do what you may otherwise do, which is that you learn your lines for any given scene a couple of days before you actually shoot it. I felt that the level of immersion that I would want to subject myself to in playing this character would mean that I didn't really want to be in the head space of technically learning lines whilst shooting, so I did learn like you would a play. But then the rest of the experience was that of a filmmaking one in terms of the nature of the way we shot the film. Because it's very intimate in the way that theatre can't be. He's expressing very dark thoughts at times, right up close into the camera, and that employs a very different part of your artillery as an actor than the stage does.

Did you find yourself recalibrating your performance at all, since it's just you onscreen?

I don't feel like I did recalibrate what I would normally do as an actor. It was just doing what felt right and true for playing this particular role. I don't think we did anything that was technically different, per se, than what you would do in any other given film, but because of who he is, the way he expresses himself, the fact that this is a guy who will happily have a conversation with a three-way mirror, means that the realms of the orthodox ways of either shooting a film or interacting with another character are kind of out of the window, so you're just doing whatever feels truthful given Peter Snowden's circumstances.

Peter spends a lot of time on the phone, either talking to people, or rehearsing talking to people. Was someone on the phone with you at those times?

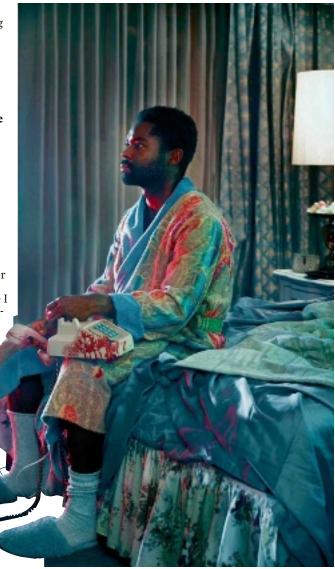

We actually made the choice to never have anyone on the other end of the line. It was something I felt very strongly about because there are times with Peter where there is someone on the other end of the line and there are times when there isn't. It is someone he has manufactured in order for him to live with himself. The film starts with Peter having committed a heinous act and he has a mental condition that means that dealing with the repercussions of both what he has done and who he is, is something that he is constantly push-

This is the second time you've worked with Brad Pitt, who also produced Selma. Do you think you're drawn to similar types of projects?

projects? Ît's funny, because we've now had two projects together, but actually my friendship with him is very much linked to us being dads with lots of children. He has six, I have four, and we get together every now and again and watch our children tear the place up. But yes, we worked together on Selma, and Nightingale was born out of that. While I was doing Selma, we had already shot Nightingale and Dede Gardner and Jeremy Kleiner, who both run Brad's company Plan B, I showed them the film, which we had finished at that time ... They saw it, showed it to Brad, and I remember him saying, my goodness, what a thing to go from Dr. King to Peter Snowden. His connection with Nightingale was very much from an actor's point of view. I think he was very interested in an actor putting themselves through that

Wait! Don't waste that food

WORD OF MOUTH Theresa Albert myfriendinfo

Worldwide, 1.3 billion tonnes of food is wasted, with most of it spoiled by grocery stores or food service outlets. In Canada, according to a study commissioned by KitchenAid, that amounts to a $40.28 household loss each and every week. People go hungry while palatable food goes to waste. That is a load of garbage. There a few things you can do at home to keep more money in your pocket and food from the dump:

Soggy lettuce

There really isn't anything you can do with it once it gets to the wilty, smelly point but you can prolong its life. Just slip a piece of paper towel in with the lettuce to help absorb the moisture and keep for a couple more days. Each time you open the box, wipe the condensation from the lid and replace the paper.

The Top 3 discarded vegetable scraps are onion skins, celery and carrot ends. All are loaded with nutrients, especially onion skins, which contain a critical anti-aging nutrient called quercetin. Store them in a freezer bag until it is full and then simmer into Breaking Bad fans jonesing for more of their favourite show may be interested to know of a pop-up bar inspired by the series that will turn an RV into a mobile cocktail lab in London this summer.

About two years after the show's end, the ABQ bar in London — which stands for the show's setting, Albuquerque, N.M. — will serve as an experimental cocktail lab allowing guests to cook up their drinks, not unlike the way Walt and Jesse cooked their meth.

ABQ will operate for three

Jennette McCurdy explains why you can't binge on her Netflix show

Ned Ehrbar

Netflix is trying something different with Between, the new series about a town quarantined after a virus kills off everyone 22 and up. Instead of letting viewers binge-watch all six episodes, Netflix is doling out the instalments one at a time each week, like traditional TV. But don't worry, series star Jennette McCurdy is here to help you wrap your mind around that.

No binging, OK?

I prepared all of my friends because when they found out I was doing a Netflix show they were like, 'I'm going to watch it so fast. Like I'm going to watch it faster than anyone!' And I was like, 'No you're not.' But I think this is a good way for the audience to stay invested and keep the conversation going. And there are only six episodes, so it's not like you're going to have to be like, 'Oh my God, this is a half-year commitment.' If there were more, then I could see how it might potentially build some frustration.

If you're a fan of...

It has sci-fi elements, it's a survivalist thriller, it has romantic elements — it's the kind of show that I enjoy watching. To me, it resembles a younger version of Lost, which is my favourite dramatic show ever, so that was very exciting for me. I have tremendous respect for all of the actors on that show. I don't know how they endured it. I'm sure they deal with a lot of people giving them flak when they're just trying to get tomatoes at Ralph's or something.

It won't leave you hanging

There are some unsolved mysteries to keep viewers curious and invested, but I do think that there are a lot of character arcs and a lot of resolution that can act as a satisfying payoff so you feel like at the end of the first season, 'OK, some of my questions were answered.'

Who she plays

My character is Wiley Day, and she's the pregnant daughter of a minister. She's really rebellious and rough around the edges, but ultimately she's very sensitive and highly insecure. She does not have the most nurturing of mother skills. She doesn't have any semblance of a maternal instinct, and she carries a lot of her own problems into motherhood.

She's not your typical hero

Wiley is really real. She seemed, like, against the base of archetypes that we see where it's somebody who's very strong and knows exactly what she's doing — the girl who's got it all together and she's strong-willed and she's smart and she's got a great smile, too. And she wasn't the angsty, completely boggeddown, over-emotional girl. I think she has a unique voice and something that is hopefully good for young people to see.

REVIEW

Chevrolet Trax reveals its agility, usefulness

Mike Goetz Metro|Canada

Like the rest of the world, Canada is becoming increasingly urbanized. According to Statistics Canada, back in the 1920s, less than 50 per cent of Canadians were urban folk. Now it's more than 80 per cent and climbing.

Vehicle design has reflected this shift, and none more so than crossovers based on subcompact vehicle platforms. These subcompact crossovers can get off-road dirty, owing to their optional AWD systems and slightly higher ground clearances, but they're really built for urban conditions, where they can offer up tallin-the-saddle visibility, smallcar manoeuvrability, and "just big enough" insides, for the couples and singles that inhabit the condo towers.

Chevrolet Trax was one of the first crossovers to really work this urban agenda, debuting back in 2013, and concentrating on two areas that have high appeal for its intended audience — safety and connectivity. Like many Chevrolets, Trax is ready to be hooked up to OnStar, and its available 4G LTE Wi-Fi hotspot. After the free trial period, however, you will need to pony up for monthly subscriptions for OnStar itself, and for a Wi-Fi data plan.

Bluetooth is standard. Rear vision camera and rear obstacle detection, and Bluetooth streaming audio, are standard on the top 2 trim lines (LT, LTZ). More electronic wonders can be had with MyLink (optional on LT, standard on LTZ), which offers a nice big touch screen, and smartphone integration to leverage lots of fun and useful apps, including Siri Eyes Free.

A plethora of airbags, and a body structure composed of 66 per cent high-strength steel, enabled Trax to ace the crash tests, one of the select few in its class to do so.

Another bright spot is ample room for four adults, though rear seat passengers will have a big bend in their knees if they're tall-ish.

Fuel efficiency is another strong suit.

In other aspects the Trax is average, or less. The interior design is useful and looks great, but also has big sections of hard plastic.

The 1.4-litre turbo is a bit loud and a bit challenged to accelerate smartly on the highway, but the transmission shifts well, and the high top gear allows for relaxed cruising.

Trax is a decent example of a great, new vehicle form, which can confidently fulfil a lot of urban transportation needs

Ford reveals specifics of law enforcement vehicles

Jil McIntosh For Metro

Other than the flashing lights and paint scheme, most police vehicles generally look similar to their civilian siblings. But they're considerably different under the skin, and built from the ground up for the hard life of a law enforcement vehicle.

"These are not retrofitted vehicles," says David Shuttleworth, commercial sales manager of Ford Canada. "They're built in Chicago at the same plant as the regular Taurus and Explorer, but they have unique features fitted to them before they come off the end of the line, and then they go to another facility for their final upfits."

Their engines and transmissions are tuned for optimum acceleration, but they also need to use as little fuel as possible and run cool when they idle, which they often do for long periods of time. Their anti-lock brakes and traction control are also uniquely tuned, and they have heavyduty brakes, wheels, tires, suspension components, and alternators.

In the front, the seats are upholstered in heavy-duty cloth, and have sculpted backs so officers can sit comfortably while wearing their utility belts. In addition to a white dome light, there's also a red one for surveillance work. While civilian vehicles have console-mounted gear shifters, Ford's Police Interceptor sedans and SUVs don't have a centre console, and their shift levers are on the steering column. The gap between the front seats is the same as in the discontinued Ford Crown Victoria, so police forces that used the old model can simply move their equipment into the new vehicles.

"The dash is unique to these vehicles," Shuttleworth says. "There's a universal mounting tray, reinforced with steel, on top of the dash so you can mount something like a camera."

The rear seats are covered in vinyl, and the door panels are flat, without pockets or cupholders. There are rear door handles, lock buttons, and window switches, but these can be disabled so "police customers" can't get out.

Beyond the standard equipment, police forces can choose from some 125 different options and packages. These include ballistic door panels, equipment mounting plates, and "mapable" steering wheel buttons, which can be programmed for such tasks as turning on the lights or siren. Cars can also be outfitted with a trunk tray to hold equipment, or a lockable vault to hold drugs or weapons when they're transported from a crime scene.

Hydrogen car paces at NASCAR

KIA

New engine to use less gas

Kia's in-house designed 1.0-litre T-GDi three-cylinder turbocharged engine made its debut at the recent Geneva Motor Show in Switzerland as the first of the automaker's range of downsized, high-efficiency powerplants. The team that developed it aimed for a 10 to 15-per cent improvement in fuel efficiency over the brand's current efficiency-leading 1.6-litre gasoline-direct-injection (GDi) engine.

ACING

Mirai marks first for race

In a move that makes it look almost progressive, NASCAR recently approved the use of a hydrogen fuel cell-powered vehicle — the limited-edition, hand-built Toyota Mirai sedan — to pace one of its races, albeit one sponsored by the Japanese automaker. The Mirai pace car led the field at the Toyota Owners 400 NASCAR Spring Cup race at Virginia's Richmond International Raceway.

Aluminum OK in crash safety

Ford's lighter-by-300-kilograms 2015 F-150 pickup truck is not only supposed to be kinder to the environment, but now also boasts a five-star rating for crash safety from the United States National Highway Traffic and Safety Administration (NHSTA). The fivestar rating, bestowed on the 2015 F-150 SuperCrew model, is the administration's highest score for overall safety. Some media critics had questioned the aluminum pickup's crashworthiness, but the NHTSA's new rating is expected to put those concerns to rest once and for all. The automaker said the aluminum-bodied F-150's lighter weight allows it to fit the truck with smaller and more efficient engines that, through turbocharging, produce the kind of power only larger engines used to be able to make.

LUXURY CARS

Hydrogen may power LS Sedan

Toyota's luxury division, Lexus, is mulling a hydrogen-powered LS sedan based on the technology underlying the Mirai hydrogen fuel-cell sedan. The model would likely be based on the next-generation LS. The fuel-cell LS would reportedly weigh several hundred pounds less than the current LS hybrid model. The vehicle would feature a "power unit" combining a 150-kilowatt fuel cell and a 295-horsepower electric motor, with enough on-board hydrogen storage to give the car a driving range just shy of 650 kilometres.

LET'S COOK

Audi introduces synthetic diesel fuel

Audi's research facility in Dresden, Germany, has produced the first batch of a synthetic diesel fuel that uses only carbon dioxide extracted from the air, electricity and water, reports Autoweek magazine. The process involves high-temperature electrolysis where water is heated to produce steam, which is then broken down into its constituent elements, hydrogen and oxygen. The hydrogen then reacts with carbon dioxide under high pressure and temperature to form a liquid composed of long-chain hydrocarbon compounds. Dubbed "blue crude" the liquid is refined to produce "e-diesel," which Audi said is free of sulphur and aromatic hydrocarbons; it's odourless, produces no soot and is more readily ignitable than traditional diesel fuel. "If we can make widespread use of CO2 as a raw material, we will make a crucial contribution to climate protection and the efficient use of resources, and put the fundamentals of the 'green economy' in place," said Germany's Minister of Education and Research Johanna Wanka in an Autoweek report.

Grand Vitara, grand dynamics

USED VEHICLE

Fuel gauge on 2006-2012 models should be checked

The third-generation Suzuki Grand Vitara launched for model-year 2006 in the fall of 2005, and owners have loved the SUV for actual off-road capability.

Remember that although Suzuki's automotive sales operations have ceased in Canada, the brand is still alive and active here, and many Suzuki dealers have full service automotive shops to take care of warranty and repairs of their automotive products. Check with the nearest Suzuki centre to you, to be sure.

Sellers of 2006-2012 models should be asked if they've experienced any issues with the fuel gauge, and note any sudden movements on the fuel gauge during your test-drive.

Confirm proper operation of all interior lighting, especially relating to illumination of the gear selector, radio head unit, and instrument cluster.

Further, confirm proper operation of all power windows, and the sunroof, noting any issues with the panel opening or closing properly. If the sunroof fails to respond or stays stuck open, the switch may need replacing.

Å few owners have reported issues relating to overheating, especially on models with the four-cylinder engine and while working the vehicle hard, for instance, towing on a hot day. This might be caused by an air bubble that blocks coolant flow. As a precaution against potential engine damage, have the cooling system inspected and serviced on any used Grand Vitara you're considering. JUSTIN PRITCHARD

What owners like

Owners commonly praise the agile and sporty appearance, generous off-road capability, and the availability of low-range gearing for help on challenging terrain. Peppy performance, and generous feature content on the high-end JLX model were also highly rated.

What owners dislike

Complaints tend to centre around heavier-thanexpected fuel consumption given the size of the engine, as well as stiff and uncomfortable back seats. Some owners wish for a richer selection of materials inside,

The verdict

Grand Vitara is far from the only small crossover option in its segment, though it does appeal for its use of a highcapability 4x4 system and relatively confident off-road capabilities. If you're set on this model, get a thumbs up from a mechanic and ensure there's a Suzuki dealer garage in your locale for maximum peace of mind.

Noise-cancellation systems on way for quiet rides

From Harman to Mitsubishi Electronics and Bose, companies are developing clever digital noise-cancelling systems that will make your next car's cabin as quiet as a library by using algorithms and microphones rather than layers of heavy soundproofing material.

Last week, Mitsubishi Electronic unveiled a new digital Active Noise Control (ANC) system for making car cabins quieter. Called FlexConnectANC, it can even deaden less predictable aural disturbances, as well as typical engine vibration and tire roar and will be available for other manufacturers to integrate into their upcoming vehicles.

"(It) provides drivers and passengers a quieter environment," said Mitsubishi Electric's Doug Ray. "A precisely tuned audio experience, including advanced ANC, will continue to be a growing differentiator for OEMs (original equipment manufacturers) an experience not available from consumer devices or the aftermarket."

The company is not alone.

Audio firm Harman unveiled its own solution, HALOsonic, at the International CES in Barcelona, Spain, in January, along with the results of a survey it had conducted with drivers — 55 per cent of respondents said unwanted cabin noise was the biggest single distraction to enjoying music while driving.

"An uncompromised sound experience is more important than ever to today's drivers, and less noise also means drivers are less likely to become tired or distracted," said Michael Mauser, president of Harman Lifestyle Division.

Active Noise Cancelling systems monitor the sounds being created by the car and entering the cabin and then create an equal, opposite sound, which is then pumped out of

Bose put the technology on the map with its noise-cancelling headphones and now it, too, has an in-car version of the system which is already used by Cadillac and Renault among others. 'Digital' soundproofing will also help car compan-

the speakers. The two sound ies build lighter, more effi-down by sound-deadening materials.

"We can provide automakers with greater opportunities to exploit lightweight materials without the risk that the perception of quality and harmony in the car will be compromised," said Mauser.

Active Noise cancelling will also play a major role in creating a cabin quiet enough for giving and receiving voice commands, hearing navigation instructions and taking hands-free calls. AFP

The other Rodgers won't play football in 2015

Jordan Rodgers' career with the B.C. Lions is over before it started.

The team announced Tuesday the quarterback won't attend training camp and that he doesn't plan on playing football in 2015.

The younger brother of two-time NFL MVP Aaron Rodgers was signed to the Lions' practice roster in October and took part in B.C.'s mini camp last month.

New Alouette wants to excel while inspiring gay athletes

While Michael Sam would prefer to be just another football player, he knows there is a unique responsibility that comes with being the first openly gay athlete in the CFL and one of only a tiny minority in North America's major professional leagues.

Signed to a two-year deal by the Montreal Alouettes last week, Sam tried to downplay the significance of the move during a news conference Tuesday, repeatedly saying he just wants to play football.

RECIPE Pepper Stuffed with Quinoa and Charred Corn Salad

Rose Reisman rosereisman.com

Ready in

Prep time: 10 minutes Cook time: 15 minutes

Ingredients

- 1½ cups chicken or vegetable
- 1 cup quinoa
- •1 cup canned corn kernels, drained
- •1 cup diced broccoli
- •1 cup diced red bell pepper
- 2 Tbsp orange juice
- concentrate, thawed • 2 Tbsp rice vinegar
- 1 Tbsp olive oil
- 2 tsp liquid honey • 1½ tsp sesame oil
- 1 tsp minced fresh garlic
- 1/3 cup chopped fresh cilantro or parsley

Directions

1. Bring the stock to a boil in a saucepan. Stir in the quinoa. Reduce the heat to the lowest heat and simmer, covered, about 15 minutes. Drain off any excess liquid. Place in a serving bowl.

- 2. Spray a non-stick skillet with cooking oil and place over medium heat. Cook the corn, stirring frequently, until it begins to char, about five minutes over medium heat. Stir in the broccoli and red pepper. Cook for four minutes, or just until the vegetables begin to soften. Transfer to the bowl with the quinoa.
- 3. Add the remaining ingredients to the quinoa and toss to coat.

* IT'S ALL IN THE STARS by Sally Brompton

Aries March 21 - April 20 There is a possibility you will find yourself in the wrong place, at the wrong time with the wrong people today. Don't worry, you will soon get back to where you should be. Next time, be more careful.

Taurus April 21 - May 21 Play to your strengths. Focus on what you are good at. If someone asks you to do something that you doubt will work out, turn them down flat. You like a challenge but you like a challenge you can master better.

Gemini May 22 - June 21 Will you be a heroic failure or a huge success? That depends on how soon you go after your target. Hold off until the weekend when the universe will be on your side

Cancer June 22 - July 23 Do the opposite of what your instincts tell you today. If you feel like speeding up, slow down. If you feel like slowing down, speed up. Everything is up in the air, including your own thoughts and feelings

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23 Whatever you worry about today don't worry about money. If you do, you are likely to make a rash decision. If you worry about anything, worry about worrying too much.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23 Question everything you hear today, even if it comes from a trustworthy source. While Mercury is moving retrograde you should take nothing on trust. With Mars strong, you could be ruinously impetuous. Play safe.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23 Do not, under any circumstances, get caught up in a neighbourhood dispute today. You may think you know how to resolve the situation but they won't listen. Worse, they may gang up on you.

musician Mr.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22 One minute you want to do one thing and the next minute you want to do something else. You are usually much more decisive than this. Come tomorrow you will be back to your old self.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21 You are focusing on the worst outcome to a situation that will likely never happen. Be positive and go to bed early for a change. Tomorrow the world will seem a rosier place

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20 Explore. Visit places you have never been before. Not only will it be fun but it will widen your outlook and make you realize how fortunate you are compared to most.

What you fear the most is the one thing you least need to fear. With the planet Mercury moving retrograde things are sure to be jumbled up.

Feb. 20 - March 20 Whatever you are told by friends and family today you should act on the assumption that there are things going on behind-the-scenes that would change the picture completely if you knew about them. Maybe you don't want to know!
